

SPRING, 1973 VOL. I NO. 1

Working Papers

For a New Society

Controlling a City's Wealth

EDWARD KIRSHNER

JAMES MOREY

The Prison Factory

MICHEL BOSQUET

Economic Inequality: A Proposal

LEE RAINWATER

STAUGHTON LYND

ANDREW KOPKIND

WILLIAM RONCO

ARTHUR WASKOW

ANNOUNCING A NEW PUBLICATION

An Invitation to a New Magazine...

Working Papers concerns itself with directions for change in America. It reports on efforts to create new institutions and efforts to change existing ones. It offers proposals for innovative policies and grass-roots politics. It presents images of "the good society" and plans for the reconstruction of America.

Why Working Papers? There is much that is wrong with our society. There is also much to be discovered about how it might be better. Programs for change, however great the need, are necessarily tentative, exploratory, speculative. So are our articles. We seek to stimulate a new dialogue on what might be done.

Working Papers is published four times a year. It is sponsored by the Cambridge Policy Studies Institute and the Institute for Policy Studies (Washington), both of which are nonprofit, tax-exempt organizations. Each issue contains nearly a hundred pages' worth of essays, reports, reviews. Working Papers will not be generally available on the newsstands — so to be sure of getting your copy, subscribe now.

A subscription form is enclosed. Simply check the appropriate box and return in the envelope provided. If you prefer, send no money and we will bill you.

Financial contributions are welcome. Working Papers is dependent largely on its readers to cover its costs. Tax-deductible contributions earmarked for Working Papers may be sent to The Cambridge Policy Studies Institute, Inc., 123 Mt. Auburn Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138.

In the first issue (Spring 1973) you'll find:

- Staughton Lynd: Blue-Collar Organizing. Environmental politics in the plants of Gary-Chicago. A report by an activist on the scene.
- Lee Rainwater: Economic Inequality and the Credit Income Tax. The evidence that poverty is relative, not absolute, and a proposal for doing something about it.
- Andrew Kopkind: Five Communes in Vermont. Life in the woods of New England, and some thoughts on the future of the rural counterculture.
- Arthur Waskow: Notes from 1999. America "after the revolution." An excerpt from a novel in progress.

Plus:

Controlling a City's Wealth, by Edward Kirshner and James Morey; The New Food Co-ops, by William Ronco; The Prison Factory, by Michel Bosquet; and The Perils of Pollyanna, by Christopher Jencks (in which an editor explains the reasons for the magazine's existence).

And there's more to come . . .

Articles on alternative media, hospitals, schools, prisons. What to do with military bases. Socialism in Latin America and welfare-statism in Sweden. A hard look at "participatory democracy." An examination of the coming "post-industrial" society. Some notions about an alternative international economy. And how to get where we want to go. By authors like Richard Flacks, Maurice Zeitlin, Barbara Garson, Geoffrey Faux, Peter Barnes, Todd Gitlin, Jane Mansbridge, Derek Shearer.

Advisory Board

Gar Alperovitz
Richard Barnet
Noam Chomsky
Harvey Cox
Richard Flacks
Robert Heilbroner
Marcus Raskin

Editorial Board

Mary Jo Bane
John Case
Allen Graubard
Christopher Jencks
Andrew Kopkind
Nancy Lyons

Subscriptions

Deborah Gordon

Working Papers

For a New Society

123 Mt. Auburn Street, Cambridge, Massachusetts 02138 • (617) 547-4474

Dear friend,

What can be done about the welfare mess?

In the first issue of Working Papers, sociologist Lee Rainwater outlines a simple but effective scheme for eliminating welfare and ending poverty. And at no net cost to any taxpayer with an income under $20,000.

Are the cities really going bankrupt?

Not at all, argue activists Edward Kirshner and James Morey. It's just that cities can't tap the real money that keeps the urban economy going. "Controlling a City's Wealth," in the same issue, shows how local groups and city governments can get the money they need.

The editors of Working Papers, like most Americans, know what the problems of our society are. And they know that not much that's constructive will be done about them as long as Nixon is in the White House.

But the solution doesn't lie simply in waiting for better people to be elected to office. We need new ideas about what to do -- and the political will to carry them out. Working Papers proposes new ideas, and reports on attempts to implement them. Want to beat inflation? William Ronco tells how members of food cooperatives in the Boston area save several dollars a week on food purchases. Worried about the environment? Staughton Lynd reports on actions taken by working people in the Gary-Chicago area to clean up their plants and communities.

1973 may not be a time for much optimism among those of us committed to social change. But neither does it have to be a time for giving up. We believe that Working Papers' unique emphasis on positive programs for change can be an antidote to apathy and discouragement. Maybe we all could use a little dose of hope.

Won't you take a minute to look over the enclosed brochure? Subscriptions are only $8 a year. We would very much like to have you join us.

Sincerely,

John Case
Nancy Lyons

John Case
Nancy Lyons

Managing Editors